Almost one hundred years later the Grand Entry, more specifically the intricately hand carved wood staircase, still shares the magnificence and beauty of the gilded age of architecture.

Original 1928 décor, appliances, linoleum floor, continuous stainless steel counter-tops, all still remain intact and in near pristine condition in the Mansion's main kitchen. A staff of fifteen always lived in the servant's quarters of the Mansion.

This bowling alley, in the Mansion's entertainment wing, was featured in Paramount Studios movie "There Will Be Blood". Imagine the five children that grew up in this house spending their afternoons bowling.

Take yourself back to the Prohibition Era as you marvel at this well-kept secret in the Mansion's entertainment wing.

Stand in the Grand Living Room of the Mansion and look up at the Minstrel Gallery where musicians would entertain the Dohenys and their party guests.

Men gathered in this room to socialize and hunt game from the balcony as a sporting activity. The game was cleaned by staff in the second floor kitchen.
